4. Cemetery Preservation Foundation Update

Cemetery Foundation President Stephen King provided the Commission with updates including: the new brochure for the kiosk, the Foundation approved to cosponsor the Gravestone Cleaning Workshop with up to $500 for supplies, there was a meeting at the cemetery on August 7 for tour planning (route, graphics, tickets), auditions for the tour will be held in August, and tour dates will be October 24-27 with the 24th for Commission members, city employees and Kennesaw State University students.

5. Old Business

A. Events Updates

Gravestone Cleaning Workshop, Life in the Cemetery & Wreaths Across America

Chairman Bramlett advised that the Cemetery Foundation would handle the $15 registration for the Gravestone Cleaning Workshop, and he spoke with Christa McCay to verify a limit of 15 people and what supplies will be needed. Mr. Bramlett advised that Life in the Cemetery could use some volunteers, and Mr. King advised that Jacob with KSU is handling the auditions. Mr. Bramlett stated he was unsure if Wreaths Across America needed volunteers this year, but they have needed section leaders in the past, and asked that people attend the event. City Clerk Lea Alvarez advised that all three events were presented at the August Events Committee meeting and all three were approved.

6. New Business

A. Cemetery Fees Update

Consideration to align memorial plaque fees with the current charges from the vendors, and to remove memorial trees from the master fee schedule.

Ms. Alvarez stated that costs have increased for plaques and presented the most recent prices. Ms. Alvarez advised that all the memorial signs on the cremation wall had been completed by the same company. Councilmember Ferris asked the Clerk's Office to look for new vendors. Ms. Alvarez advised there was not enough time to find new vendors and have them approved by the Cemetery Commission before the city council was set to hear the updated Master Fee Schedule. Prices discussed with final decision: $750 for employee cemetery lots, $800 Cremation Garden service and plaque, $400 Cremation Garden service only, $400 Cremation Garden plaque only, $75 Memorial Tree Plaques (replacement or add to current Memorial Tree), and to remove Memorial Trees from price list as they are no longer for sale.

Commissioner Poole moved to accept the new fees as presented. Commissioner Burrell seconded the motion. Vote taken, unanimously approved (5:0). Motion passed.

7. Staff Comment

Ms. Alvarez stated that four of the new trees had to be removed because they were not viable. The trees would be revisited in the fall.

8. Adjourn

Chairman Bramlett adjourned the meeting at 4:27 p.m.

KENNESAW DEPOT

Kennesaw owes much of its existence to the railroad. Georgia began construction of the state-owned Western and Atlantic Railroad (W&A) in 1837. When it was completed in 1850, the W&A connected present-day Atlanta and Chattanooga, Tennessee. Kennesaw (or Big Shanty as it was known at the time) was a common stop for freight and passenger trains traveling on the W&A line. By 1860, Big Shanty boasted a modest two-story eating house, which came to be known as the Lacy Hotel, that provided meals to railroad passengers and workers. In 1862, following the outbreak of the Civil War, the Great Locomotive Chase began outside the Lacy Hotel when twenty federal spies stole the W&A's General locomotive with plans to destroy rail and telegraph lines on their way to Chattanooga.

The first extensively documented depot facility in Kennesaw appeared around 1870 during the tenure of the W&A. The Nashville, Chattanooga, and St. Louis Railway (NC&StL) acquired the W&A's lease in 1890 and eventually replaced the older depot with one of their own design. The NC&StL's new depot building, which still stands to this day, was redesigned in 1925. Built during a period of segregation, it featured racially divided waiting areas complete with separate entrances and ticket windows for colored and white passengers. The depot remained in use until passenger service ended in 1968. CSX Transportation (CSX) took over the railway's lease in 1986 after several railroads consolidated. Today, CSX freight trains pass through Kennesaw daily on the same line used since the early nineteenth century.

KENNESAW SPRING

Due in part to its proximity to fresh spring water, the present-day area of Kennesaw has a long history of settlement. Around the time of the American Revolution, the area served as a boundary between two indigenous peoples: the Creek to the south and the Cherokee to the north. The discovery of gold in northwest Georgia in the early nineteenth century brought the encroachment of white settlers. The state of Georgia encouraged additional settlement and the establishment of small farms with the 1832 Cobb County Land Lottery, which allotted land at four cents an acre. Ultimately, both the Creek and the Cherokee were forced out of the area. The Creek were removed by 1827, while the Cherokee were forcibly expelled to Indian Territory (present-day Oklahoma) in 1838 on the "Trail of Tears." The region's population increased along with white settlement. By the Civil War, Cobb County's population had swelled to 18,000 people, a quarter of which were enslaved people of African descent.

As a stop on the Western & Atlantic Railroad, this area was originally known as Big Shanty, a reference to the line's elevation and the shacks built nearby. The local depot served as the center of the community. In 1887, Big Shanty was incorporated as the City of Kennesaw (named after nearby Kennesaw Mountain). Rural and agricultural well into the twentieth century, a modest downtown row of businesses included a bank and a dry goods store. In the 1920s, the road through downtown Kennesaw was paved as part of the Dixie Highway. Settlement in the region increased significantly in the decades that followed. By the twenty-first century, the City of Kennesaw was a fully developed suburb of Atlanta encompassing 9.5 square miles. The city's population, which continues to grow and diversify, stood at 33,000 in 2020.

KENNESAW CITY CEMETERY

The early history of the Kennesaw City Cemetery is shrouded in mystery, but the earliest known burial took place in 1863. In that year, infant Lucius Summers, whose family was the namesake of Summers Street, was laid to rest. At the time, the community was known as "Big Shanty," and was a small railroad stop on the Western & Atlantic Railroad. After the Civil War, more area residents would be laid to rest here, and by 1890 there were around 40 burials.

Even though Kennesaw was incorporated in 1887, it would not be until 1900 that this land was owned by the community. In that year Mrs. Jane E. Shumway donated one acre of land to the town and sold three and a half more acres for $100. Each lot was originally sold for $6. The cemetery would expand in the 1930s when Mayor Luther Chalker began using adjacent land for burials, which he eventually gave to the city in 1982. Today, the cemetery is eight acres.

A wide variety of notable Kennesaw residents are buried here. James G. Lewis was an early town mayor, helped to start a local bank, and is the namesake of Lewis Street. Gaspard Carrie operated a hotel downtown and was a judge after the Civil War. More recently, Helen Odom was a longtime postmaster. When he began his career in 1900, Dr. John W. Ellis was one of the few physicians in Kennesaw. He would serve our community for fifty years. Susie Stegall was a local newspaper correspondent who taught many local residents to play the piano. Because of Kennesaw's railroad heritage, it is not surprising that over 70 employees of various railroads can be found in this cemetery. The Kennesaw City Cemetery continues to serve as a place to remember the community members whom each played special roles in our area.
